CREATIVE DIRECTOR | FOUNDER OF HER DESIGN LAB | CREATIVE STRATEGIST | VISUAL STORYTELLER

As a self-taught Creative Director and creative strategist, I bring a unique, intuitive approach to crafting bold campaigns, standout branding solutions, and scroll-stopping digital content. From advertising and rebranding to content creation, my work blends storytelling with strategy—resulting in visuals that not only look good, but work.

I'm passionate about building brands that resonate deeply and drive results. Whether it's a grassroots campaign or a global brand refresh, I design with purpose, emotion, and intention—always tailored to each client's vision.

In 2025, I was honoured as a Cannes Young Lions-Kenya winner and selected for the Cannes Lions Creative Academy 30 Under 30, Class of 2025-26. I was also Jury for the Cannes Young Lions- Kenya 2026 –a recognition of creativity, leadership, and impact in design.

BRANDING

CLIENT INFORMATION

HUSTLESASA

Rebranding an African entertainment platform for its next chapter.

THE CHALLENGE

HustleSasa had outgrown its old-school identity.

As it expanded across Africa, it needed a more contemporary, confident and distinctly African brand that could unite different markets.

THE INSIGHT

What do we have in common?

Africa isn't one aesthetic. It's made up of thousands of cultures, languages and visual traditions.
But we share things we've made our own: African fashion and print, matatus, patterned furniture and the visual language of everyday life.
Rather than inventing a new definition of "African," we built from these familiar cultural references.

THE CREATIVE IDEA

Africa, made by us.

We reinterpreted familiar African visual elements through bold, contemporary illustration and pattern.
The result was a flexible visual language that could travel from Ghana to Kenya to South Africa while still feeling familiar.

THE DESIGN

A bold, timeless wordmark anchored the new identity.
Around it, we created an illustrated world inspired by African culture, fashion, entertainment and everyday life.
The identity became less about representing one country and more about creating a sense of shared African identity.

MY ROLE

Creative Lead

I led the creative direction and visual identity development, from cultural exploration and concept development to the visual language and final brand applications.

OUR VISUAL DNA

Style: Batik-inspired, hand-cut shapes and icons drawn from everyday African life: matatus, plastic chairs, radios, stools, vinyl.

Rationale: These icons are visual shortcuts to shared experiences. From Nairobi to Lagos, these objects tell stories of movement, connection, and celebration. The Batik texture ties them together in a pan-African visual handshake.

KENYA KWENYE LENS

What does Kenya look like through Kenyan eyes?

A visual exploration developed for Magical Kenya and National Geographic.

THE CHALLENGE

Kenya is one of the world's most photographed places, but much of its imagery is captured through an outsider's lens.

So we asked:

What if Kenyans told the story themselves?

Not through the perfect tourism photograph, but through the eyes of the people who live here.

THE APPROACH

Kenya, through our lens.

Rather than create one definitive image of Kenya, we created a collection of perspectives:

- A fisherman documenting his day.
- A Maasai man capturing his surroundings.
- Someone at the Coast photographing life from a boat.
- A young Kenyan using whatever camera they have.

Because there isn't one Kenya, and there shouldn't be one way of seeing it.

THE VISUAL WORLD

The campaign brought together different lenses, people, compositions and realities.

Phones, cameras and personal perspectives replaced the polished, predictable tourism image with something more immediate and authentic.

Kenya wasn't the subject of the photograph. Kenyans were behind the camera.

THE BIGGER OPPORTUNITY

The idea could go further through partnerships with camera and technology brands such as Sony, Nikon or Samsung.

By putting better tools in the hands of Kenyan storytellers, the campaign could do more than ask Kenyans to show us Kenya.

It could equip them to tell their own stories.

MY ROLE

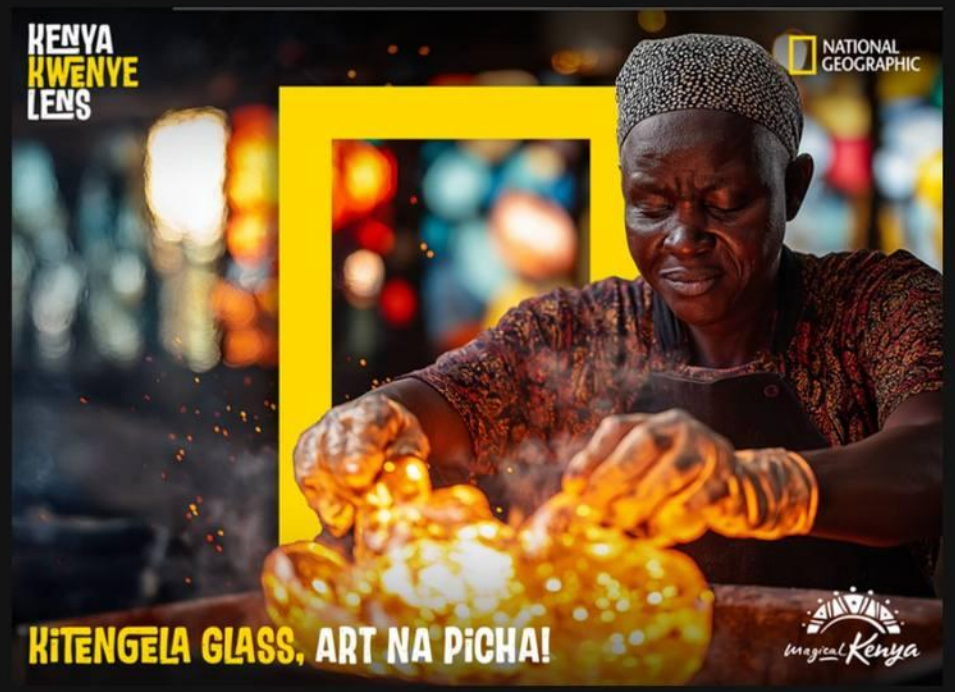

Creative development and visual direction.

I developed the central creative thought and explored how it could become a flexible visual system built around different Kenyan perspectives and photographic lenses.

TUNATAKA AMANI

Protection shouldn't hurt.

A passion project exploring how visual communication can respond to political unrest in Kenya.

THE CONTEXT

Kenya was experiencing intense political and social unrest, with reports of abductions, burned homes and increasing violence.
The central question was:
Who is protecting us?

THE CREATIVE CHALLENGE

How do you address a serious issue without adding aggression to an already volatile conversation?
We avoided graphic imagery and real people, using illustration to create distance while keeping the message clear.

THE CREATIVE APPROACH

Illustration became the entry point.
A comic-inspired visual language made the subject more accessible, attracting attention before revealing the reality behind the message.

THE TWO-PART SYSTEM

01 – THE ILLUSTRATION
A visual moment designed to capture attention.
02 – THE MESSAGE
A direct statement that returned the viewer to the issue:
Protection shouldn't hurt.

THE IDEA

TUNATAKA AMANI.

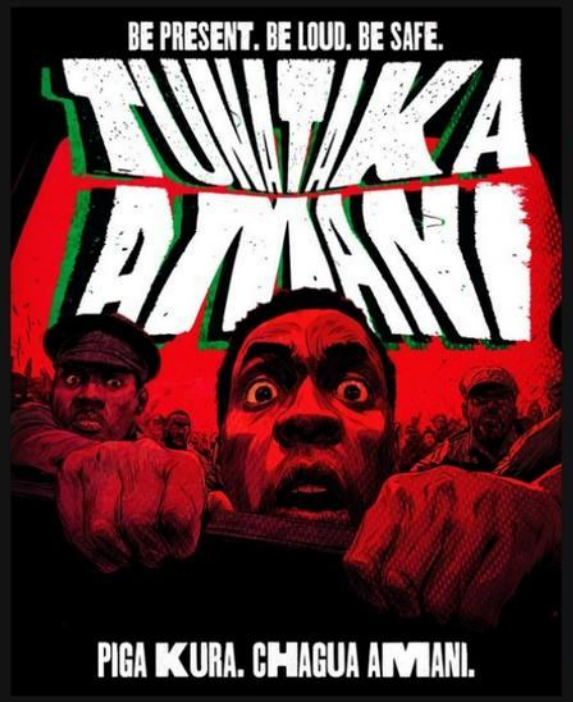

A simple demand for peace, communicated without shock or aggression.

MY ROLE

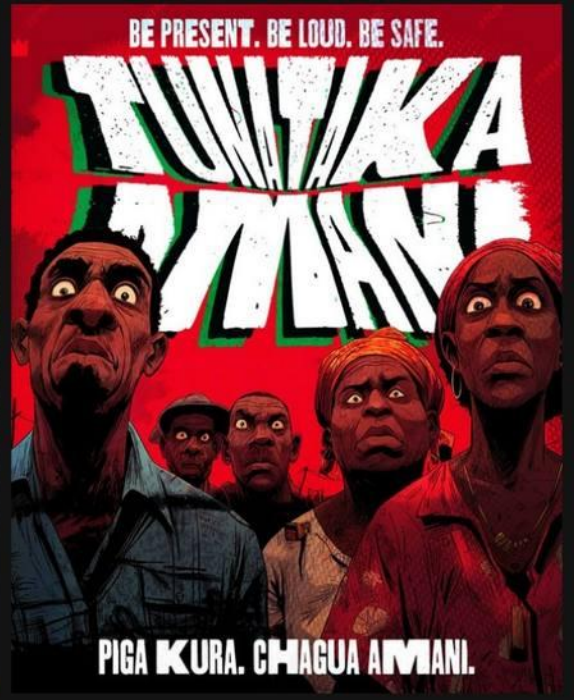

Creative Director

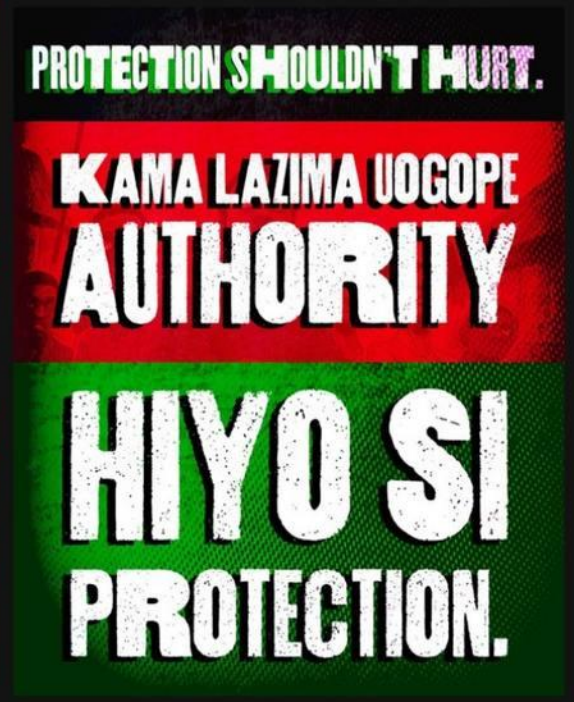

I developed the creative direction, illustrated visual language, two-part key visual system and campaign messaging.

HADITHI

Stories worth passing on.

A personal exploration of how a Kenyan tea brand could become a vessel for Kenyan stories.

THE CHALLENGE

We are becoming more global, more connected, and increasingly removed from some of the things that make us who we are.

Our languages.
Our folklore.
Our stories.

I grew up Kenyan, but I don't even speak my own mother tongue. And that made me think about how much of our culture gets lost between generations.

THE THOUGHT

What if tea could help us remember?

Tea is deeply woven into Kenyan life. It is something we share, serve, gather around and pass between generations.

So I imagined a tea brand that could do the same with our stories.

THE IDEA

Hadithi, stories worth passing on.

A collection of Kenyan teas inspired by different counties, their flavours and their folklore.

Each blend tells a different story of Kenya, turning a familiar ritual into an invitation to discover where we come from.

47 counties.
Thousands of stories.
One cup at a time.

THE DESIGN

Hadithi is colourful, illustrative and contemporary.

Each pack creates a visual world inspired by its place, story and flavour, while coming together as one recognisable Kenyan brand.

The goal wasn't to make African culture look traditional.

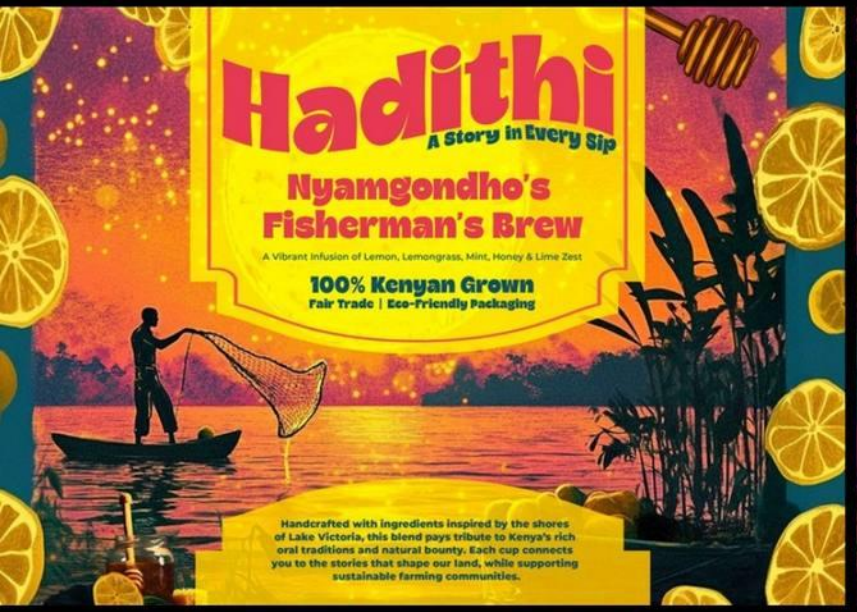

It was to make it feel alive.

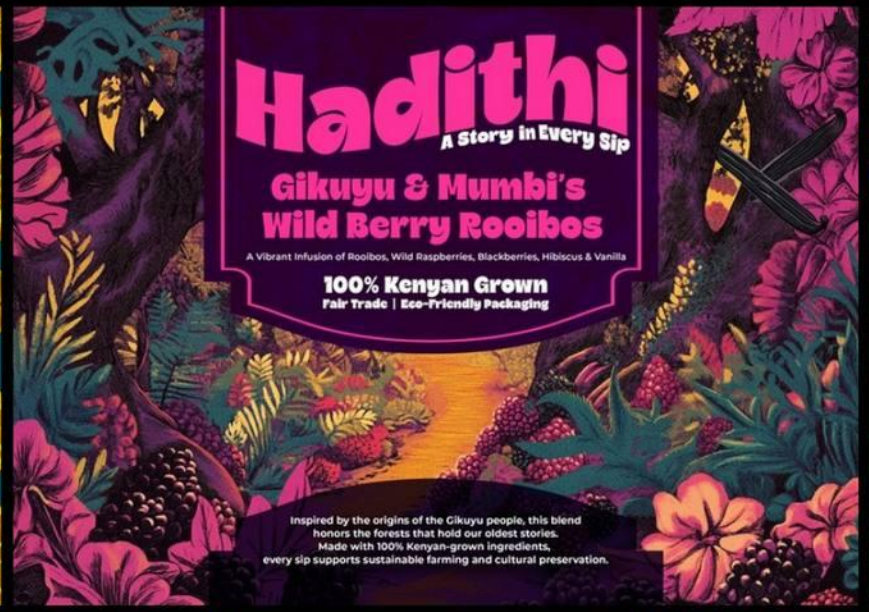

MY ROLE

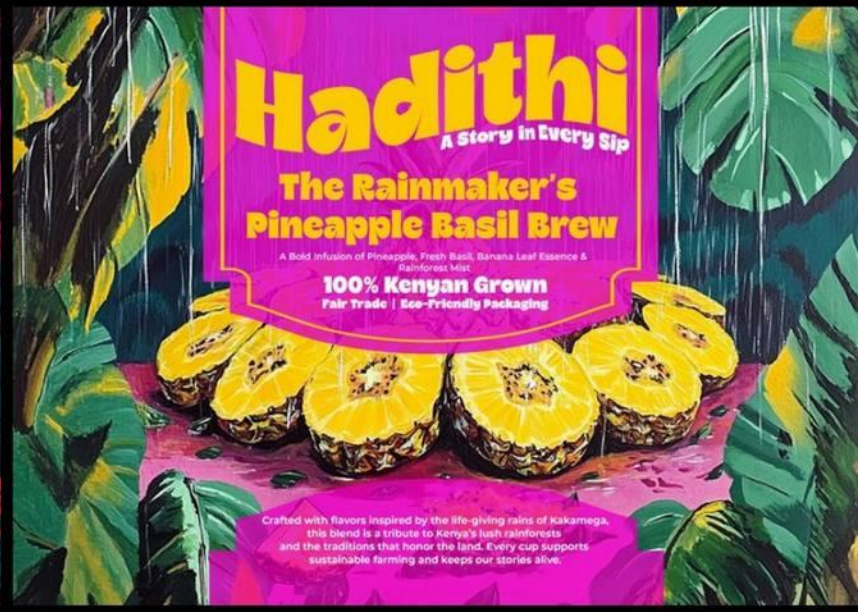

Concept, Creative Direction, Brand Identity & Packaging Design

CHANGE BEHAVIOR CAMPAIGN

AVAC

One pill. One month. Stay protected.

A global clinical trial recruitment campaign for a monthly HIV prevention pill, reaching LGBTQ+ communities across 10 countries in Africa, Asia and South America.

THE CHALLENGE

The campaign needed to feel universal while remaining relevant across different cultures, languages and experiences of HIV, healthcare and stigma.

The idea was established. I was brought in to lead the visual direction and make it work across markets.

THE APPROACH

We built a flexible visual system around the simplicity of the proposition:

- One pill.
- One month.
- Stay protected.

The campaign was adapted across social, digital, print, clinical spaces and public environments.

DESIGNING WITH THE AUDIENCE

- The work was tested with members of the LGBTQ+ communities we were trying to reach.
- Their feedback shaped the final direction.
- What resonated stayed. What didn't was reconsidered.

FROM GLOBAL TO LOCAL

We developed the global brand campaign but mainly focused executions for Kenya and South Africa, adapting the campaign to each market's culture, language and environment.
The goal wasn't simply to translate the work.
It was to make it feel like it belonged.

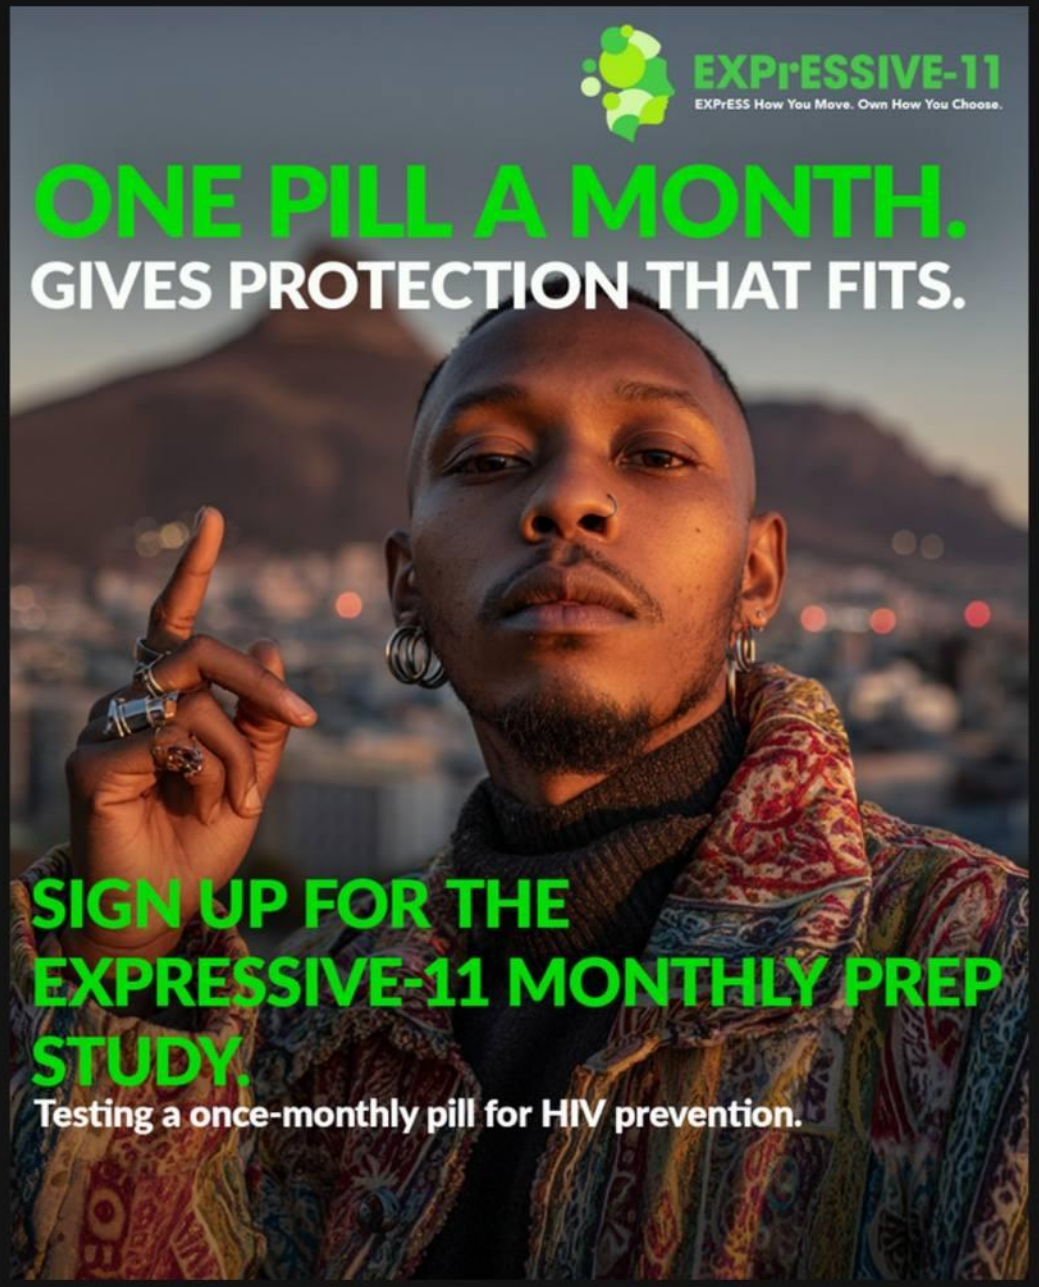

MY ROLE

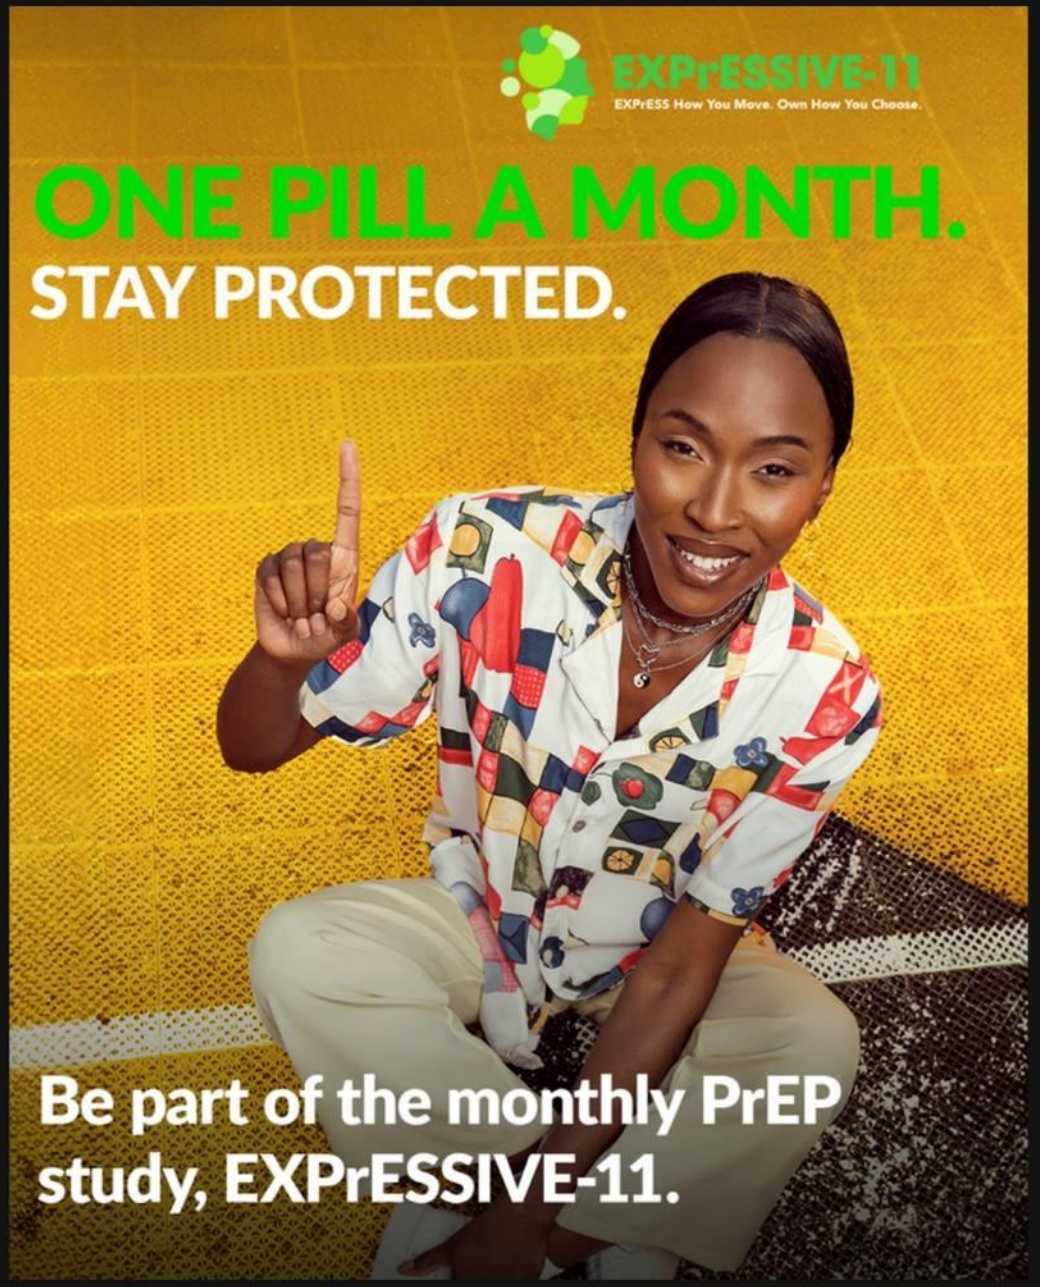

Art Director, Nendo

I worked alongside another Art Director to develop the visual direction. My direction was selected for the final campaign, and I led its visual development and adaptation across audiences, formats and markets.

FINANCE

CLIENT INFORMATION

DFCU MAALI

Maali makes it real.

THE CHALLENGE

DFCU Bank was launching Maali, a financial product designed to help low-income entrepreneurs grow their small businesses.
The challenge was making a financial product feel relevant to the people it was actually built for.
It couldn't feel like another banking product talking at small business owners. It needed to feel like something that understood their ambitions.

THE QUESTION

How do you make a financial product feel like a tool for someone's future, rather than just another bank account?

THE STRATEGY

I started with the people.

Small businesses don't start big. A kiosk can become a shop. A tailor can become a fashion business. A mechanic working for someone else can eventually own their own garage.
The product wasn't really about saving money. It was about what that money could make possible.
That became the strategic thought:

MAALI MAKES IT REAL.

THE IDEA

We showed entrepreneurs not just where they are, but where their business could take them.

- A mandazi seller becomes a bakery owner.
- A tailor becomes the owner of a design studio.
- A mechanic becomes the owner of their own garage.

The visual language brought these aspirations to life, turning everyday businesses into bigger, more ambitious versions of themselves.

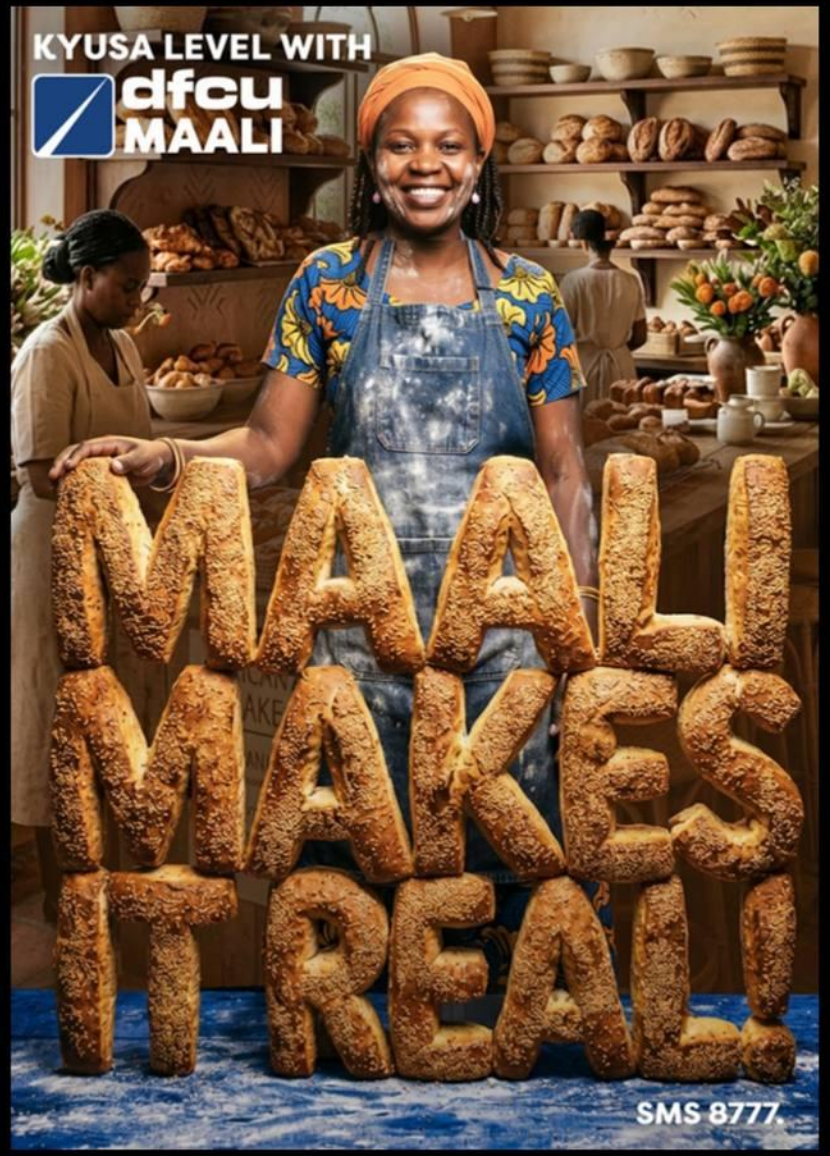

THE CAMPAIGN

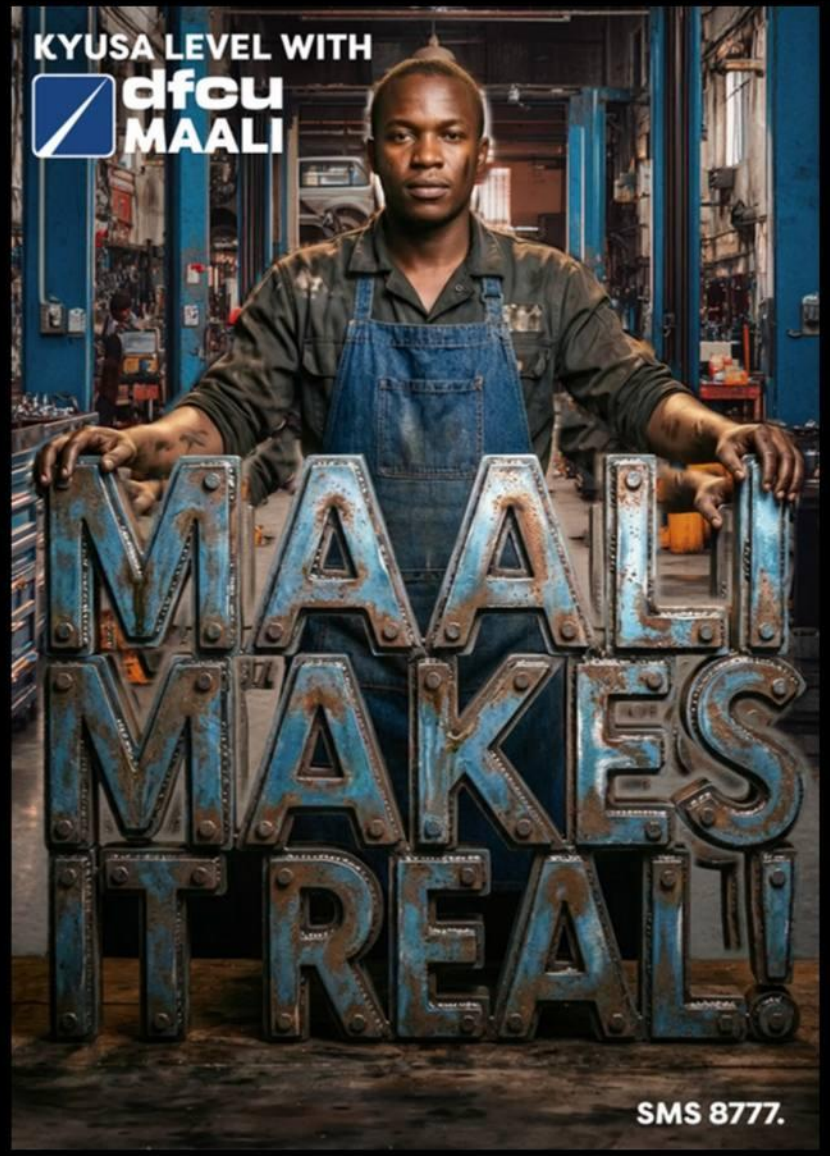

The KVs placed real entrepreneurial ambition at the centre of the story, using bold typography and visual transformation to make Maali feel accessible, aspirational and rooted in everyday Ugandan life.

MY ROLE

Art Director & Strategist.
Led the research, strategic development, campaign concept and visual direction.

THE BOOK

CLIENT INFORMATION

THE DESIGNERS GUIDE TO ABSOLUTE BULLSHIT

A survival guide for the parts of creative life nobody teaches you.

THE CONTEXT

There are things you learn in design school, and then there are the things you only learn once you start working. The "quick one." The impossible client request. The last-minute changes. The conversations you have with other creatives that somehow never make it into the room.
I wanted to make those experiences visible, relatable and, most importantly, funny.

THE THOUGHT

What if there was a guide for the bullshit that comes with being a creative?

FROM GLOBAL TO LOCAL

I created The Designers Guide to Absolute Bullshit, a comic-book-style survival guide that follows Nina, an illustrated creative navigating the absurdity of agency life.
Instead of pretending these experiences don't exist, the book turns them into something creatives can laugh about and recognise themselves in.

THE BOOK

The guide combines storytelling, games and community-driven content.

- Nina navigates real creative-life scenarios.
- Creative Bingo turns familiar agency moments into a game.
- The Designer Survival Kit tackles the things you need to survive the job.
- Anonymous Confessions gives creatives a place to air out the things they can't always say at work.

The book eventually grew into Designer vs Designer, a creative community built around non-agency briefs.

WHAT IT BECAME

I give designers a brief, one week and the freedom to interpret it however they want. We've run eight challenges, with creatives sharing their work and voting on each other's ideas. We're now in Season Two.
What started as a book became a community where creatives could experiment, challenge each other and make things simply because they wanted to.

COMMUNITY CONFESSIONS

THE CHAOTIC CREW

Kevin's Story: Corporate Prisoner

"Client said 'send me the open files.' I said sure. I sent them my resignation letter instead."

I've survived 11 'quick ones' this week, three ghostings, and two clients who think I'm a magician.

My coffee is cold, my laptop is cracked, and Microsoft Teams just gave me another 'quick call' notification.

Tom - The Unpaid Intern Energy

"Client said, 'Can you make it like Canva but better?'

I said yes.
I lied."
They wanted 10 banners, 1 reel, and a carousel all by EOD.

I built their dream campaign. I sent the files. They said, "We'll circle back."
They circled back three months later asking, "Can we make it pop?"

Bro, I'm not a magician. I'm just underpaid.

She did the tweak. Because she needed the money. Because she wanted peace. Because her standards are high but her boundaries are broken.

"Thanks so much," they said. "Let's work together again soon." Nina replied: "Would love to." She lied.

DESIGNER TRANSLATION

(what they say vs. what they mean)

What the Client Says	What They Mean
"Just a quick one!"	Prepare to suffer.
"We'll know it when we see it."	We have no clue what we want.
"Make it pop."	Please fix our boring idea.
"You're the expert!"	But we won't listen to you.
"Can you send the open files?"	We don't want to pay you again.
"Let's touch base."	I have more unpaid tasks for you.
"We need it by EOD."	We forgot to brief you on time.
"Let's hop on a quick call."	Let's waste 45 minutes.
"Our budget is flexible."	Our budget is imaginary.
"This should only take you five minutes."	I don't respect your time or skill.

LET'S F*CKING PLAY

Congratulations. You've survived the story.

You've survived ghosting, quick calls, vague briefs, and timelines made by people who think Canva is magic.

But this next part? This is for you.

Not the client.

Not the deadlines.

Not the boss who thinks "just a quick one" is a love language.

Here's the fun sh*t:

- Bingo.
- Confessions.
- Survival tools.
- Things that will make you feel slightly more alive.

You've earned this.

Let's f*cking play.

NINA'S LAWS OF SURVIVAL

(Carved in coffee stains and unpaid invoices)

Rule 1: Always send the invoice before the file.

Rule 2: "Just a quick one" = 7 rounds of feedback.

Rule 3: If they say "Can you hop on a quick call? Run!!!!!

Rule 4: When in doubt, ghost them back.

Rule 5: A 'friendly reminder' email is just you begging for your life.

Rule 6: Fonts don't solve bad taste.

Rule 7: You're not lazy, you're emotionally unavailable for this nonsense.

Rule 8: The more people on the email thread, the less peace you'll have.

Rule 9: All deadlines are fake until payment is real.

Rule 10: If you have to cry, cry on the export screen.

They finally replied. "Hey sorry, crazy week! Just one tiny tweak?" Finn saw red. Then black. Then Helvetica Neue Bold.

She stayed up. She skipped dinner. She lost feelings in both legs. And when she sent the first draft? The Client said: "Hmm? not quite what I imagined. Let me loop in my team." Her team was 7 people. And a dog. With opinions.

DESINGER VS DESIGNER CHALLENGE .

BUILDING THE COMMUNITY

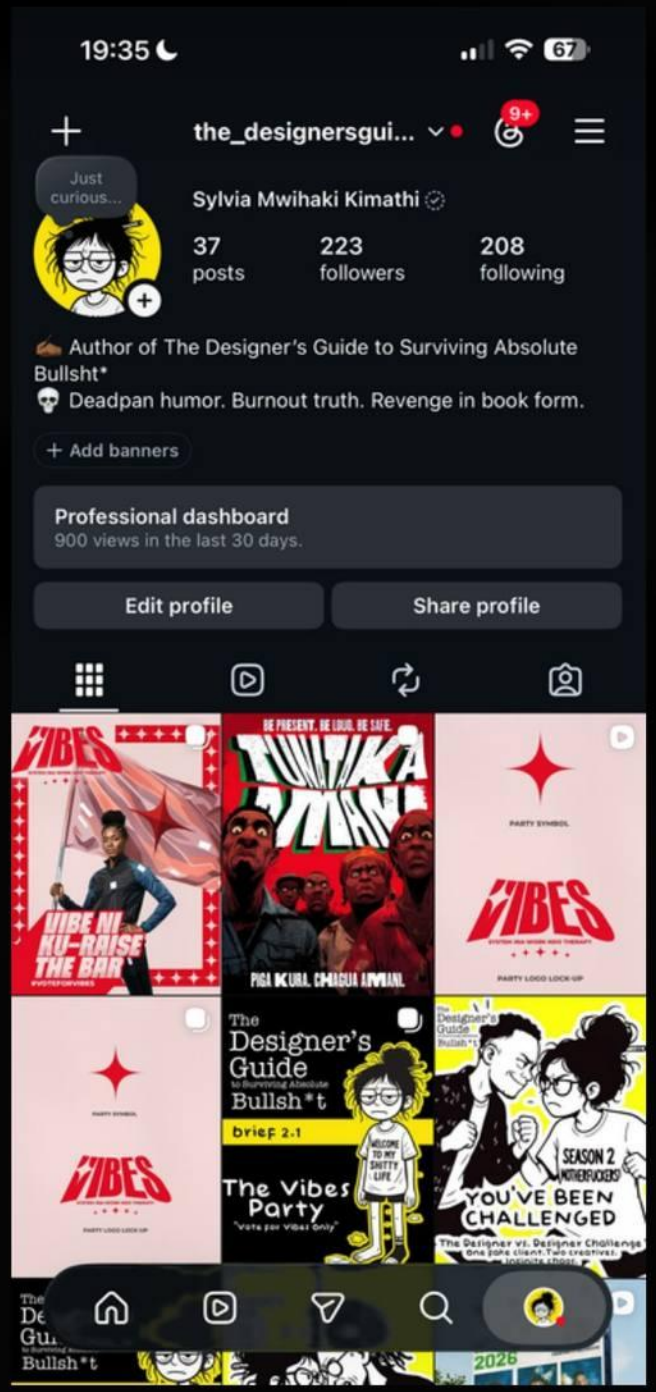

I started Designer vs Designer Challenge because I wanted creatives to have a space to make things without the pressure of a client.

The idea is simple: a fun, non-agency brief, one week to respond, and a chance to see how other designers think.

What started as a small challenge has grown into eight challenges and a second season, with creatives submitting work, voting, sharing ideas and coming back for more.

I built the format, the briefs, the visual identity and the illustrated characters that became part of the experience.

It's still growing, but it has become its own little creative community, built around one simple idea: make something because you want to.
